The Beggarly Shifts of the Disunion

The extremists of the South, it seems, hom hausted their catalogue of denunciations of Messrs. Bell and Evenerr. They have no cused them both of unsoundness, of abolition sympathies, of everything calculated, in their opinion, to weaken them in the estimation of the Southern people. They have been an swered and exposed. They have been put to route on the hustings, in the newspapers, ev erywhere. And as a final resort they are attempting the game of intimidation on the

They, in effect, tell us the present opponents of BRECKINGIDGE will be gibbetted without benefit of clergy. Having secured, as they fondly believe, the election of Lincoln, as they laid down their programme and directed their best energies to do, they are now industriously, though covertly, playing the last act in the drama, preliminary to the grand tragedy of revolution. They have known from the outset that, in addition to a Republican triumph they were bound to have a majority of the Southern people to vote their ticket, before they could risk the bloody step of disunion. A majority vote for Bell. in the Southern States would baulk all their plans and leave them high and dry on the barren shores of defeat. They would not dare inaugurate a revolution in the face of an ascertained majority against them in the South. And knowing that BRECKINEIDGE now has not the shadow of a chance for election, they are endeavoring to rally a majority of the votes of the South in his behalf, thus Ireland, or dependencies more than two- N. There is but one way for the people, the honest, conservative, patriotic masses to meet and overturn the conspirators, and that is by rallying to the polls, and speaking through the ballot-box, in tones of tripple thunder, their disapprobation of the course pursued by the enemies of the Union. Such threats as those launched by the Courier are absolutely contemptible. We only notice them for the purpose of acquainting our readers with the plans and purposes of the disunionists, and the means they are bringing into requisition to compass their aims. The sincere lover of his country will hardly sue for respect, or crouchingly beg for mercy from its enemies-neither will he be intimidated or swerved from the right line of duty by the insane threats and empty bragadocio of such revolutionary organs as the New Or-

Where are the Kansas Aid Societies? After the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, the Northern States were filled with Kansas Aid Societies. Every city, town and village organized its society. The pulpit, the rostrum, the fireside council, were all used as instrumentalities to raise money to send men, provisions and arms to Kansas to prevent the Southern men from introducing slavery into the Territory. Thousands of persons were induced to leave their homes and go to Kansas, and do the bidding of republican fanaticism. To aid them in carrying out the behests of a spurious philanthropy, hundreds of thousands of dollars were contributed and expended. It was not a real love of freedom so much as hatred of Southern people that inspired the Kansas crusaders. Now, that they have succeeded in dedicating the Territory to freedom, as they term it, what has become of their philanthropy? Where now are their Aid Societies? The Rockingham (Va.) Register announces that Wr. F. Gordon, jr., Esq., of Albermarle, Va., who was a delegate to the Breckinginge State convention, has taken the stump for December 1,600,000 or 1,700,000 inhabitants. The in-Disunien --- Mr. Pugh, of Ala. There are some disunionists in the South, who do not like Mr. YANCEY, attempt to c 2ver up their treasonable purposes by profe sions of love for a constitutional Union, a thing they have long since declared does not exist.

Mr. Pugh, one of the representatives in Congress from Alabama, is one of these. He is especially remarkable for its recognition cause he believes it would be advantageous to the South. The Montgomery Confederation Pike county :

Hon. James L. He has come out boldly disunion as a positive good. He says that "he thinks Lincoln's election already settled, and the vote cast at the South he regarded as an expression of popular sentiment."

Jackson Democrats of Alabama, do you hear what this bold precipitator says? If you vote for Breckinridge you are committed to open secession. Are you willing to rush madly out of the Union before the Southern States have met in convention and decided this question. Mr. Pugh thinks and boldly declares that "disunion is not an evil, but the mad cry of disunion. Does he speak for Minute Men of Richland marched in torchlight procession through the principal streets of the city. There were about three handred in ranks, making a very imposing and brilliant display. They each wore a red scarf, with the letters M. M. imprinted on it. The organization is rapidly extending through the State and the South. It is designed as an organization for the preservation of the interests and institutions of the South, and the ormation of a Southern Confederacy. The recent elections will doubtless stimulate its growth, and we would not be surprised if, in month, with proper drill and discipline, it furnishes an army strong enough to maintain my independent move that may be made by he Southern States."

A GREAT EXPORT MOVEMENT .- The exports from the port of New York for the past week are valued at more than three million ix hundred thousand dollars-larger by nearly a miliion than any previous week in the history of our commerce. Nearly or quite one-half of this great value was made up of breadstuffs. Liverpool and London take nearly one-half the value of the exports, and British ports in the United Kingdom, thirds. Indeed, except cotton to Havre, there is little to swell the value of the exports to other than to British ports. The effect of the heavy shipments to British home ports has depressed exchange, and nearly stopped the export of specie.

The Position of South Carolina.

Commenting upon the complexion of the Legislature recently elected in South Carolina, the Charleston Courier remarks : "So far as our information extends there is emarkable unanimity-even for South Carolina-in the political convictions of the members elect. They have been very wisely and properly chosen without special pledges as to the details of the resistance, which in all buman probability will be devolved on the South, by the results of the pending election for the Presidency. The electors have wisely selected in most cases men too well known to need pledging, but as to the absolute and imperative necessity for repellant or defensive action on the part of the South, in the event referred to, here is a remarkable unanimity. The Statesman and the Soldier. Count Cavour's message to the Sardinian house of deputies, is the most statesman like paper which Italian polities has elicited, from the outbreak of the Piedmontese war, until the present time. It is at once broad and advocates disunion openly and boldly; be-of ultimate moral principles. Highly as we have estimated the abilities of the Sardinian minister, and much as we have respected the chivalric nobility of his character, we were makes the following remarks respecting a not prepared for a paper evincing a wisdom speech made by this gentleman recently in so comprehensive, and which must give him the first rank among living statesmen.

The highest evidence of ability is afforded by the Statesman who can judge impartially and broadly of matters in which he is a mover, and which are of personal importance and interst to himself and country. Count Cavour speaks of the great movement of his own nation and time calmly and philosophifor disunion. He is preparing the minds of the people for this judgment is redeemed from any suspicion of apathy, by a glow of patriotism, of loyalty, and of genial admiration for the very man who had just denounced him, which could only exist in a spirit as ardent as it is

It is clear from the tone of this paper, to what master mind the judicious measures which have distinguished the course of Victor Emanuel, especially in the present war, owe their origin. The Sardinian king is happy in such a minister. The beroic but impuls ive Garibaldi well knew what hand it was a positive good." Do the people of Alabama, that straightened and restrained him. In and especially of the Northern part of the the presumption of success, like the prince State, where the body, and life, and soul of the old line Democracy reside, believe that disunion is a positive good." Mr. Pugh thinks that the impulse—soon acknowledged his error and apporters of Breckinridge will all join in the unanswerable strength of the minister's position. At this very time, too, the providence which both acknowledge sent the happy repulse of Capua; at the moment worth more to Garibaldi and to Italy than a victory. This salutary and decided check helped his better reason,

Cavour is not willing to incur the penalty of ingratitude by rushing upon destruction. "In our pres ent circumstances, to confront the French troops," says he, "would be not merely unheard of folly; it would be grievous fault and guilt," The part of the message, however, which hows most clearly that the mind of the Sardinian minister has grasped the subject of Italian liberty in its broadest view, is that in which he refers to the Popish see. We quote a part of the paragraph:

"The question of Rome is none of those which can be solved by the sword alone. It meets on its way moral obstacles only to be overcome by moral forces; and we are fully confident that, sooner or later, those forces will bring into the gates of that glorious metropolis a change consistent with the wishes of its people, with the aspirations of all good Italians, with the true principles and the lasting interests of Catholicism."

These words are, indeed, worthy of a Christian statesman. With wonderful force they come from the lips of a Piedmontese minister of state, standing in judgment upon the old enemy and oppressor of his country—Rome. The same confidence in divine power and justice is manifested, now that prosperity is taking the place of that former low estate, as when the unresisting vallies were watered with martys' blood, two hundred years ago.

The Memphis Brach Railroad is prospering beyond that place to Bowling-Green, which place is to receive a new name to prevent route is graded and the rails are being rapidly laid. Last week the track-laying was commenced at Paris, the workmen coming this way, so that the twenty-six miles between that point and the Tennessee river will be completed with all possible dispatch, as it is entirely graded except some two or three miles, upon which a vigorous force is now working. The bridge over Tennessee river is in a very forward state; the piers are above the present water line, so that the work will not be impeded by any subsequent rise. All the ground there, and there seems to be no doubt that the contract to finish it this year will be carried out. From all we can learn the promise of Gen. Quarles will be fully redeemed, and during the month of February next we shall be able to leave here in the morning, dine at Clarksville, and enjoy the hospitality of the celebrated Gayoso House not political, but we have not yet received at Memphis at supper time. Lord Brougha'n on the Presidential Election.

(From a recept Address by Lord Broug "The grand question of the election of President (now approaching) depends entirely upon the principles expressed by the candidates respecting slavery, and this question involves all other disputes, inasmuch as, to the unspeakable misfortune of that great community, the appointment of the public functionaries, from the highest to the humblest, depends upon the election of the chief magistrate; and all may be removed on their party being defeated at the election. As regards the subject itself the issue of the consest is important; for the question is, whether slavery shall be perpetuated and exwhether slavery shall be perpetuated and ex-tended, by adopting the principle that the institution is national and universal, or regarding it as local only, and authorized by the law of the particular districts. The re-vival of the African slave trade is by no means an impossible result from a victory of the Southern States, where it has been not very faintly announced; and the struggle which they so vehemently maintain with the North may even bring about the dissolution of the Union—one of the greatest calamities that could happen to America and the world; to America, as ending, if it did not hear in to America, as ending, if it did not begin, in civil war; to the world, as shaking the credit of all popular government. Another calamity is far from unlikely to be caused by the conflict;—the liberation of the slaves by insurrection; a consummation to be earnestly deprecated, as much for themselves as for their masters. When Dr. Johnson astonished the frinds of Church and King of Oxford, by proposing as a toast, "The speedy revolt of the slaves in Jamaica, and success to them," he had not lived to see the dreadful consequences to the unhappy victims of our sordid oppression, in the misery far worse even than oppression, brought upon them by the insurrection which shook it off in the French Islands. He might feel little compassion for the masters—the supporters of what they term the "institu--and might ask them to show how the King of Dahomy should not plead the imme-morial custom of his country requiring the slaughter of hundreds that he might float his canoe in blood as the appointed tribute of filial affection at his father's funeral. But these masters are not the only patriots to be considered when there is a question of slave insurrection; and we must contemplate with horror the fate of the negroes, from worst of ills, civil war in its worst formcivil war in the Slave States, and must regard as bereft of all claim to be ranked among men whoever could, from party zeal or perverse views of personal advantage, lend themselves to measures by bare possi-bility leading to such hideons scenes:

THE LION AND THE POUR BULLS. Four Bulls which had entered into a very strict friendship, kept always near one auother, and fed together. The Lion often saw them, and as often had a mind to make one of them his prey; but, though he could have subdued any of them singly, yet he was afraid to attack the whole alliance, as knowing they would have been too hard for him, and therefore contented himself for the present, with keeping at a distance. At last, perceiving no attempt was to be made upon them as long as their combination held, he took occasion, by whispers and hints, to foment jealousies and raise divisions among them. This stratagem succeeded so well that the bulls grew cold and reserved towards one another, which soon after ripen-ed into a downright hatred and aversion; and, at last, ended in a total separation. The Lion had now obtained his end: and, as impossible as it was for him to hurt them while they were united, he found no diffi-

NOVELS OF

The Greatness and Decline

CESAR BIRROTEAU.

From the French of Honore de Balzac.

Translated by o. W. WIGHT & F. B. GOODRICH,

In one Elegant Volume, 12mo, Cloth,

Rund & Carneton have got out the first of their series of the novels of Honoug DE Balzac translated by Messrs, O. W. Wigger and F. B. Goodbach, both gentlemen favorably known in connection with original and ranslated works The present is entitled "The Greatness and Decline of Cesar Barrottenu," and the translaness and Decline of Cesar Barrotteau," and the translators introduce it with the following Preface: "That the Novels of Honore de Balzac," says the London Crific, are immeasurably the greatest works of the Loras Farm, and hong the same bought by him of kind that France—hideed, we would add, any other country-has ever seen, does not admit of the slight- and sale free ountry—has ever seen, does not admit of the slight—and sale free from redemption, notes to have personal st dispute. That they go deeper into the human—security, and to be payable in the Rank, and lieu to be heart, represent more truly the human passions, and reflect with greater accuracy the phases of human life, than any other novelist has ever been able to do, is ome may object that there are features in his compocourge her; he drags her forth into the light of day, sets her up in the pillery, and calls her by the right ame. We believe that so far from having a demoralzing effect, the careful and thoughtful perusal of Balac's writings can have no other result than to increas the love of virtue and the dread of vice " W. T. BERRY & CO., Nashville, October 11, '60. PUBLIC SQUARE,
